Wrigley Building Lobby Renovation

The lobbies of this landmark skyscraper in Chicago had, through the years, been compromised by intrusion of retail functions and insensitive "modernizations" that were incompatible with the notable exterior character of the building. The Wrigley Company's corporate headquarters -- the major tenant of this building -- required a more impressive lobby for their presence.

The reorganization of spaces, including the entry portal, main lobby, tenant spaces and elevator lobbies, resulted in a coherent geometric concept. Highlights of the design include increased natural light augmented with sophisticated technical lighting, finite detailing of architectural elements and materials to unify all design components, and a complete update of mechanical systems.
